U.S. won't intervene in anti-OPEC lawsuit

WASHINGTON, July 25 (Agencies) — The U.S. Justice Department has decided against becoming involved in an antitrust suit brought against oil-producing nations by the Machinists Union, Department spokesman Terrence Adamson has said.

"Since the United States is not a party in this case, the Department will not avail itself of the opportunity to present its views at this time," Adamson said.

The Union has accused the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries of violating U.S. antitrust law by agreeing to

U.N. troops take cover in Lebanon crossfire

BEIT YAHOUN, Lebanon, July 25 (R) — United Nations troops were locked in a tense confrontation with Israeli-backed militias late Wednesday after being caught in fierce crossfire.

About 30 Irish soldiers serving with the U.N. peacekeeping force in Lebanon (UNIFIL) had to take cover late Tuesday night when Palestinian commandos opened fire on the right-wing militiamen with armor-piercing rockets and heavy machine guns.

Carter seeks Saudi support

WASHINGTON, July 25 The Carter administration has launched a fresh initiative to win Saudi Arabia's support for U.S. Middle East peace efforts by formulating new high-priority proposals for a resolution to the question of Jerusalem, reliable sources

Full details of the American proposals on the future status of the Holy City were not immediately known. But they were said to include effective Arab control over East Jerusalem.

The sources said the proposals were designed to encourage Saudi Arabia to take a more active role in efforts to broaden the Camp David peace process.

U.S. policymakers are hoping the new proposals will prompt Saudi leaders to use their good offices with other Arab parties to the Middle East dispute, and bring at least Jordan - and possibly the PLO - into the negotiating pro-

At the reception, hosted by Saudi Ambassador-designate Faisal Al-Hegelan, Strauss told "Arab News" "We'd like to find an Arab state to help us in our peace efforts."

Strauss said "problems" had cropped up in the Egyptian-Israeli negotiations on Palestinian autonomy. While he would not directly attribute the difficulties to Israel, he said "the problems are not with Egypt."

The negotiator said "we have reached the point where there's no way to achieve peace without solving the Palestinian problem."

Asked whether such a solution included the Palestine Liberation Organization, Strauss said: "We are interested in the Palestinian people." He would not elaborate. Informed sources said Strauss and other key administration officers had now concluded that Jerusalem might hold the key to breaking the negotiating deadlock and broadening the talks.

A serious American effort to resolve the thorny question of the delegation.

Holy City's status could inspire broader Arab confidence in U.S. intentions, officials are said to believe.

But some sources were skeptical of this approach. One former official described the Jerusalem initiative as "a carrot — much like the Sinai was for Egypt."

The approach "could backfire. if the U.S. can't persuade Israel to talk about Jerusalem," the ex-Official said

It was not known whether the Carter administration has presented its Jerusalem proposals to the Israeli government.

Meanwhile, the United States was reported to be edging closer to an open dialogue with the PLO. According to sources in New York, a major PLO delegation is expected to visit U.N. headquarters in late September to partici-

Dayan arrived at Amsterdam's - Israeli Foreign Minister Moshe Schiphol Airport Wednesday for a three-day visit to the Netherlands. During his stay, Dayan will meet with Dutch officials for talks that are expected to center on the role of the Dutch contingent in the United Nations forces in Lebanon and a number of bilateral matters.

Dutch Foreign Ministry officials said Dayan is making "a working visit" in return for the February trip to Israel by Dutch Foreign Minister Christoph van der Klaanw. However, the Netherlands is the only country on the Israeli minister's agenda and observers said a major topic of discussion is bound to concern the United Nations Interim Forces in Lebanon (UNIFIL). Prior to the press conference, Peres had had two and one half hours of talks with Khalil and both men said they discussed the overall Middle East situation, including progress in bilateral relations.

Foreign Minister Henri Simonet said Tuesday that the Brussels government was putting pressure on the seven other firms to complete the hospitals. The hospital in Jeddah is said to be on schedule but the Riyadh hospital is running late.

But Simonet said the Belgian government would not get involved in Eurosystem's financial problems. Earlier, the Saudi side at meetings in Brussels last month of the Belgian-Saudi Joint Commission had asked for government guarantees on completion of all Belgian projects — similar to an agreement in force with the Korean government. This was apparently not forthcoming.

Eurosystem's financial difficulties stem partly from the fact it was apparently undercapitalized. That problem was compounded when a Mexican subcontractor, Servicios Profesionales Construccion, fell behind on the civil works and the National Guard halted progress payments last September.

Eurosystem, a comparatively small firm in 1976, teamed up with a major Belgian arms concern, Poudreries Reunies de Belgique, to bid for the contract.

PRB, which took a 51 per cent stake in Eurosystem, last month proposed a rescue plan whereby the seven other members of the Eurosystem consortium would put up 900 million Belgian francs ($ 30 million). This was not successful and as, under Belgian law, the 51 per cent ownership does not amount to full control, Eurosystem was duly declared bankrupt last Friday. Its losses were reported at 785 million Belgian

Kabul says U.S. must reduce staff

LONDON, July 25 (R) -Kabul Radio said Tuesday that Afghanistan has ordered the United States to reduce its embassy staff in Kabul to the strength it had when a pro-Marxist government took power last year.

The report, monitored in London, said that some foreign embassies had made an unwarranted increase in the diplomatic community in Kabul. Countries other than the United States were not named. The radio said that the U.S. should send home "that number of officials ... appointed since the revolution" in 1978.

It added that U.S. representation should be reduced in proportion to the lessening of aid from Washington to Afghanistan.

The State Department said Monday that it was preparing to send home about 100 dependents of U.S. official personnel in Kabul but would leave an embassy staff of 48. U.S. officials in Washington said the United States has heard nothing from its embassy in Kabul to indicate that Afghanistan had requested a cut in staff.

The decision to evacuate dependents and non-essential officials was initiated by the United States because of the deteriorating security situation in Afghanistan, officials said. U.S. officials said the 78 family dependents and 22 officials to be withdrawn had arrived at different times and this was unconnected with their recall.

Executed at dawn

ISLAMABAD, July 25 (R) — Four men convicted with former Pakistan Prime Minister Zulfikar Ali Bhutto of a political murder were hanged Tuesday, nearly four months after Bhutto went to the gallows. Prison officials said two were executed in Rawalpindi District Jail and the others in prisons in Lahore and Faisalabad at dawn Tuesday.

The delay in executing the men, who were charged with carrying out the killing said to have been ordered by Bhutto, led to accusations against Pakistan's military ruler Gen. Zia that he intended only to eliminate the ex-premier. The four men, members of Bhutto's former Federal Security Force were hanged by relatives of Pakistan's leading executioner Tara Masih, who hanged Bhutto on April 4.

Masib, who was the target of death threats after Bhutto's execution, was taken to hospital in Lahore earlier this month. He was reported to be suffering from tuberculosis and exhaustion and was said to be in critical condition. But later reports said his condition was improving.

The hangmen Tuesday were Masih's son and nephews. They

Managua envoy due to return

Nicaragua maintains ties with U.S.

— In an exchange of diplomatic notes, the United States and Nicaragua agreed Tuesday to continuing diplomatic relations, the State Department said.

Department Spokesman John Trattner said the exchange did not amount to a conferral of recognition on the new government by the United States.

"The question of recognition does not arise," Trattner said, referring to the Carter administration's policy that the United States recognizes countries and tries to deal with whatever governments exist in them.

In fact, the United States, through special envoy Villiam Bowdler, began dealing with the Nicaraguan junta in Costa Rica weeks ago and has never stopped.

Trattner said Lawrence Pezzulio, the ambassador to Nicaragua, will return to Managua next week, and the embassy will soon be fully staffed.

He said the United States continues to shop emergency food aid to Nicaragua, and plans to increase that aid "to the extent possible."

Thus far, Trattner said, there has been no formal request for the extradition of ex-President Anastasio Somoza, who fled to Florida

The United States has made no commitment to Somoza to protect him from extradition, Trattmer said. He acknowledged that the subject had arisen during Somoza's talks with American diolomats in the waning days of his

The United States' 1905 extradtion treaty with Nicaragua, according to Department officials, would require Nicaragua to indict Somoza and present documents showing sufficient cause for him to be tried. It prevents extradition for "political offenses."

The officials said that even if the administration were satisfied by a Nicaraguan request, Somoza undoubtedly would be able to tie the case up in legal procedures for a substantial time.

LONDON, July 25 (AP) - The British government, committed to a major expansion of its nuclear power capability, has signed a deal with Australia for supplies of uranium the government announced Tuesday.

At the same time, Environment Secretary Michael Heseltine said that at least 15 areas of Britain will be tested to determine if nuclear rubbish can be burned safely. Most will be in remote areas like the Highlands.

The two developments were certain to spark a major row between the government, determined to develop alternate energy sources and environmentalists and politicians critical of Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher's personal commitment to nuclear power.

The announcement of the boxings appeared destined to exacerbate mounting fears that Britain could become riddled with nuclear garbage pits that would make the country the world's nuclear dust-

"This is not a program for disposal of radioactive waste. It is purely research," Heseltine said. He stressed in a written answer to a question in the House of Commons that the tests were designed solely to find out whether underground dumping of nuclear waste was the best way of disposing of the atomic garbage from British nuclear plants.

Heseltine said it will take about 10 years before the government makes up its mind what it will do. He gave no indication as to what quantities of uranium waste might eventually be involved. But he emphasized that what: ever method of nuclear waste disposal the government decides on, there is no question of carrying out experiments with radioactive Nuclear protesters have in the last two years intensified their campaign against Britain's nuclear program, including accepting nuc-

No White House pressure Army chief denies making deal on SALT next best result would be no treaty, but modernization of forces.

Jones and other members of the Joint Chiefs defended the treaty before the Senate Armed Services Committee. They said repeatedly the nation risks falling behind the Soviet Union in strategic forces in the 1980s and must improve the U.S. arsenal of missiles, bombers

"The most serious concern of the Joint Chiefs of Staff in this regard is the risk that SALT II could become a tranquilizer for the American people," Jones said.

SALT I," the general said. He complained that the United States failed to do all it should have done in military research and development and deployment of strategic weapon systems.

Jones, speaking for the Joint Chiefs of Staff, said he was "disappointed the treaty did not achieve more than it did."

However, he called the treaty a 'modest but useful step" and said it should be ratified by the Senate.

Jones said improvements in strategic forces should include deployment of the $30 billion MX mobile missile system, installation of air-launched cruise missiles on B-52 bombers, modernization of submarine ballistic missile systems and development of a new aircraft for carrying cruise missiles.

The MX program has been delayed two years by President Carter. He announced June 8 he was going ahead with full-scale development. The administration still has not worked out all the details of how to deploy it.

Ex-premier sees Australia linked with N. Zealand

ADELAIDE, July 25 (AP) New Zealand may have to be economically integrated with Australia by the turn of the century if it is to survive, former Australian Prime Minister Gough Whitlam said Tuesday.

He said economic integration with Australia may be "unthink-able" to New Zealanders, partly because they will be the last members of the Commonwealth to retain the Queen as their head of state, and partly because New Zealanders may feel to a certain extent that their economy is already subservient to Australia's.

"Nonetheless, the ultimate solutions for Australia's and New Zealand's malaises are similar."

AUTHORITY FIRST

The various rebellions for autonomy in Iran have found in the multiple authorities of the country an incentive and in the weakened armed forces a foe that they can defy. Thus the Kurds, who had for a long time served the Shah and received ample military supplies from Israel to harrass the Iraqi government have now turned their guns on the Islamic republic which still suffers deeply from the pangs of birth. The Arabs in Khuzestan are also up in arms and other regions and ethnic groups seem no less restive.

The Islamic republic, which unleashed the fury of the masses to overthrow the once indomitable Shah, has so far failed to control the runaway movements for large measures of autonomy or outright secession.

For this, the revolution is to blame. It has failed to give the central government, chosen by the country's spiritual leader, enough unrivalled authority to restore law and order. Indeed, the government is so disdained as to be practically an ineffectual instrument useful only for ceremony or bureac-

In such an atmosphere, and given the decimation of the army during and after the revolution and the arms littering the towns and country, it is fairly easy to challenge government authority. The militias created by the revolution to counterbalance the army and the government are no match for armed and well-entrenched tribesmen giving vent to feelings of frustration long pent-up during the regime of the Shah and his father.

Hence the chaos which is playing nicely into the hands of those who wish to destabilize the country for their own ends. Prolonged chaos will breed frustration and disgust that may well develop into a counter revolution and near anarchy. Or it may be used later on by a strong, well-organized group that can ride the crest of disorder and seize power in the name of the "downtrodden masses," as has been the case in other parts of the world.

Ayatollah Khomeini is a good and well-meaning man and he may be said to be the best thing to happen to Iran since the Muslim dynasty. His rule by Sharia is the best news for Muslims since Abdul Aziz united the Arabian Peninsula and declared Islam the state religion and constitution.

But he needs to create an orderly society based not only on individual liberties but also on respect for legally constituted authority. Without that the slide to anarchy can be hard to

A new search for Egypt's past

By Shyam Bhatia

CAIRO -Workers digging a new sewage trench from Cairo into the desert at Abu Rawash were halfway through when they were abruptly ordered to stop.

Now they are back at work with a different mission: in the blistering summer heat, they are cutting a trench which it is boped will reveal long-lost Pharaonic treasures.

The excavators are looking for the valley temple of an important but little-known Pharaoh, Dedef Ra, who ruled during the period of the Old Kingdom around 2,700 BC. Dedef Ra was the second son of the great Pharaoh, Cheops, whose pyramid is the grandest of the three that dot the landscape at Giza, only three miles north of Abu Rawash.

Dedef Ra ruled Egypt for eight years after his father's death and he in turn was succeeded by his younger brother Chephren. When Chephren died, his own son Mycerinus became the new king of Upper and Lower Egypt. The three big pyramids at Giza are named after Cheops, Chephren and Dedef Ra is something of a mystery figure. Very little is known about how he died, or what he looked like and why his pyramid, excavated in 1925 was located some distance away from that of Cheops.

For that matter little is known about Cheops himself, although inscriptions suggest he was a powerful and wealthy Pharaoh whose rule extended far into the Western Desert, to the borders of Sinai and deep into Nubia in the south. But only one six-inch statue of him has been found.

When Dedef Ra's valley temple is fully uncovered, Egyptian archaeologists hope they will find statues of the Pharaoh himself, of his father Cheops and inscriptions that might shed light on this important period of ancient Egyptian history. There is also an unspoken hope of finding a gold-sheathed sun ship, symbolic transport in the old days for carrying the dead

Pharaoh's sour to the sun. The excavations at Abu Rawash are being organized by the director of Giza antiquities, Nasif Mohammed Hasan, an intense, dedicated man who says Dedef Ra's valley temple is only one example of the still many undiscovered antiquities in the area of Giza and Starved of funds, he operates from a tiny, corrugated iron shack that serves both as his office and center of operations for the valley temple excavations. According to Hasan, the existence of the valley temple has been known for many years, but its precise location was pinpointed only when work began on the sewage trench.

The traditional lay-out for a pyramid, he says, was to have a valley temple to the west of the pyramid, where the Pharaoh's body was embalmed, and a mortuary temple to the east, where the body lay in state before burial. They valley temple for the Cheops pyramid has still not been found.

Although he would like to sponsor many more digs in the area, Hasan says he has to work within a very tight budget and this prevents him from being more adventurous. Major projects, like the excavations at Abu Rawash, are possible only when new houses or industrial projects are located on historial sites and the government is then forced to release funds to establish the value of what lies beneath the surface.

"We need much more money if the archaeological treasures of Giza are to be more comprehensively charted." he says. "One way might be to attract more foreign archaeologists to work in Egypt.

"What has been uncovered in Giza and elsewhere in Egypt represents only a small proportion of antiquities still waiting to be discovered." — (OFNS)

The boat people: Another tragedy for the world

By Michael Adams

LONDON -Whatever else it did, last weekend's conference in Geneva focused the attention of many people on a tragedy which they might otherwise have ignored. The tragedy, of course, is that of the "boat people," the refugees from Indo-China who are streaming down the coasts of the South China Sea and seeking refuge among a variety of populations who for the most part want to have nothing to do with them.

For more than a year the exodus has been going on, and since the Chinese invasion of Vietnam in February of this year it has become a flood. Many of the refugees are ethnic Chinese from Vietnam; most of the rest are Vietnamese for whom the unification of the northern and southern balves of that ill-used country in 1976, in the aftermath of a generation of war, posed the difficult problem of coming to terms with a government which many of them had good cause to fear. For all sorts of reasons. some good and some bad, they preferred exile to life under the new regime. In a country which has suffered as much as Vietnam has suffered ever since World War II (and even before that) it is difficult enough for the experts to establish a balance of right and wrong, justice and injustice, loyalty and treason. For the rest of us, far from the scene and relying on information provided by others for any judgement we may try to make, it is almost imposs-

And does it matter where the balance lies? For the problem now is not one of trying to see whose fault it is that the tragedy exists; the problem is to try to see what can be cone for its victims. And the victims, whether they are Vietnamese or Chinese or Cambodians or anything else, are men and women - and children too - just like all the other refugees who have followed a sad trail away from their homes as a result of events over which most of them had no control at all. Some of them have property, others have none - but what they all lack is the security which all of us need, the security of a home where they can live their own lives free from the threat of oppression at the hands of a government or a society which has disowned them.

In recent weeks, as the world's press has woken up to the scale of the tragedy, our television screens - here in Britain, at any rate - have been full of pictures graphically illustrating the plight of these unfortunates. On beaches where they have been washed ashore or have landed surreptitiously from boats leaking and battered by storms, they live crowded together in conditions which often are barely endurable. Many of them have been attacked at sea by pirates, stripped of their belongings, beaten up, the women often assaulted. There are few terrors which they have not known, few hardships which they have not had to endure. And - what is worst - for the vast majority there is as yet no end, no refuge in sight. And that, of course, is what the conference is (was) all about.

Where are these people to 20, and who is to finance the vast migration which must somehow be organized? It is tempting for those of us who are far away and who have played no part in creating the situation of which they are the victims, to leave their problem to the neighboring countries or to those who must share the blame for the devastation which has overtaken Indochina. But most of the neighboring countries have problems of their own, problems of overcrowding and unemployment, problems of racial tension between communities different in origin or in political or religious affiliation; and these countries reject the responsibility which others have forced upon them. As for the countries which have used Vietnam as a battleground through so many years, it is surely right that they should take the lead in assuming responsibility for the refugees - but there are limits to what they can do in coping with so huge a problem.

Estimates of the numbers involved are imprecise. Their departure is not supervised, their arrival wherever possible is kept secret for fear they will be turned away - and many of them, no one knows how many, never arrive at all (or do so only as corpses) because their flimsy and ancient boats are wrecked at sea and they are washed up lifeless on the inhospitable shore. But it is estimated that a quarter of a million have landed somewhere along the coasts of south-east Asia; Hong Kong alone is receiving up to 1500 in a single day and now has nearly 70,000 crammed into its already overcrowded perimeter waiting for onward shipment to some more permanent home.

In such an emergency, surely we do not have to wait to apportion responsibility before we take joint action to provide help? And those of us who have known other refugee problems, who have watched the miserable columns with their bundles and sancepans and their sad-eyed children, and then seen the camps in which they huddled, deprived of $\frac{1}{2}$ even the simplest of human comforts — deprived, above all, of hope -- can we turn a deaf ear to this new cry for sympathy?

It was the thought of the Palestinian refugees, more than anything else, that made me reach for my chequebook the other day to answer an appeal launched by Oxfam for help for the boat people from Vietnam. And as I did so, I hoped that in the Arab world, with the memory of its own tragic refugee problem, there would be many who would find it in their hearts to help these other refugees, people with whose problem the Arabs have no connection and to whom they owe nothing - nothing, that is, except the sympathy and the charity that we all of us owe to each other and to those in need,

There are perhaps not many places in the Arab world where these boat people could find new homes. But there are in the Arab world plenty of individuals and organizations who could afford to help feed and clothe and house the refugees, and t finance their transport to the places where peop are ready to take them in. If any reader of An News would like to make a contribution and is not sure where to address it, I shall be happy to forward & any sum, large or small, to Oxfam, which I know will make good use of it on behalf of the refugees from a. Just as it has done --- and is sti with the contributions for the relief of the refugees from Palestine. Send donations to me, do "Asharq ? The happy ending to the two-day siege of the Egyptian Embassy in Ankara has created a new sense of brotherhood between Turkev and the Palestine Liberation Organization. It has also boosted the image of Premier Bulent Ecevit, whose popularity in recent months had plummeted to a level comparable to Jimmy Carter's.

Four Palestinian commandos - members of the splinter group known as the Red Eagles of the Palestinian Revolution - who stormed the building after killing two Turkish police guards and then held the staff hostage for 48 hours, were eventually induced to surrender without resort to force.

What happens now to the four is a matter of intense speculation in Ankara. They were immediately whisked off for interrogation by the Turkish intelligence service, which naturally wants to know how they entered Turkey in the first place and whether they have any links with Turkish subversive organizations.

For years it has been alleged that Turkish underground factions have received training at Palestinian camps, particularly in Syria. The four attackers are held in a military prison near Ankara and seem likely to face trial in a martial law court. (At present 19 of Turkey's 67 provinces are under martial law.)

Some of the political implications of the siege are already becoming apparent. The key role played in the negotiations to release the hostages by a team of emissaries from the PLO made a deep impression on Ecevit, who not only lavished praise on their efforts but agreed to the immediate opening of a PLO office in

Ankara siege proves a boost for the PLO

As a result Turkey has drawn closer to the Palestinians than ever before - though Ecevit makes a sharp distinction between the mainstream PLO and factions such as the Red Eagles.

The initial decision to accept a PLO presence in Turkey was made three years ago by Ecevit's arch rival, Suleyman Demirel. During the Islamic Foreign Ministers conference in Islambul in May, 1976, Demirel - then heading the Nationalist Front coalition Government - was anxious to secure Arab support for the Turkish case on Cyprus and calculated that recognition of the PLO might be a useful move in that direction. But after the agreement in principle virtually nothing happened.

Now, as a result of the PLO's intervention in the drama at the Egyptian Imbassy, a Palestinian mission is to operate in Ankara, with all that implies for Turkey's future relations with Israel, the Sadat regime in Egypt and Western governments which still view the Palestinians with either reserve or repugnance.

The Ecevit Government's decision is represented essentially as a goodwill gesture to PLO leader Yasser Arafat, and not as a concession to the four who seized the Egyptian Embassy. Ecevit insisted immediately after the siege that none of the terrorists' demands had been met; these included the severance of Turkey's relations with Egypt and Israel, the release of two Palestinians in prison in Cairo and a safe passage for themselves out of Turkey.

Some confusion surrounds the two commandos in the Egyptian jail. At one point last weekend, Abu Firas, the leader of the PLO negotiating team, claimed that Cairo had agreed to release them and had then reneged on the undertaking.

President Anwar Sadat appears to be adamant that there will be no concessions. Ecevit has been evasive. The Turkish Prime Minister? has also significantly refrained from expressing thanks to Sadat for Egypt's role in the negotiations. As a result, relations between Ankara and Cairo, never warm, may cool further.

But these diplomatic nuances do not detract from Ecevit's success in securing the release of the hostages—a success which he plans to exploit to the maximum at a time when his government seems close. to collanse

At the end of the embassy siege minister of the interor, Hasa' Fahmi Gunes was photographed embracing and kissing one of the four attackers emerging from the building. The furor caused by the photograph - splashed on the front page of Turkey's leading right wing daily — has reached extraordinary proportions. Demirel argue that anyone displaying such warmth to Palestinian commandos is no. suited to be Turkey's Minister of the Interior at a time when terrorism is causing havoc throughout the country.

The Ecevit Government will probably stand or fall on its performance at the mid-term elections scheduled for Oct. 14, which might result in the Opposition securing a parliamentary majority. By that time the crucial issue will be, not the Egyptian embassy siege, but the state of the Turkish economy - (OFNS)

saudi press review

Newspapers Wednesday led with the news of Ramadan, the Muslim holy month which began that day. Many of the papers commented on it and its significance for Muslims.

Continuous Israeli raids and armed incursions into Israel were also front page news. Quoting news agencies, the newspapers said that the American ambassador in Beirut had reassured President Sarkis that there would be no large scale invasion of Lebanon by Israel in the near future.

Some newspapers also frontpaged reports that Jordan was getting British Chieftain tanks for its armed forces.

Writing on Ramadan Al-Medina said that "this month is an occasion for all Muslims to return to the right path and appreciate the significance of the fast that was intended by God. It should not be an occasion for eating more and working less as a news agency correspondent claimed in a story about Ramadan." "It would be scandalous," the paper said, "if it is true that during the holy month Muslim countries import more meat and other foodstuffs than during other months."

"The idea of the month is to live sparingly and not to include in gluttonous eating. It is to feel as hungary as those who are always hungry and, therefore, feel for them and strengthen the bonds between those who have and those who have not."

Dwelling on the same subject Al-Jazirah exhorted all good Muslims to give generously to charity during the holy month. "We have to give so that we may help those poor and deprived amongst us, the paper said urging donations to the King Faisal Foundation, the-Islamic Charitable Society and the Riyadh Philanthropics Society. These societies were formed to help the poor and are well organized to receive and disperse donations quite efficiently. Those who can give must do so, for this is the month of giving.

makes it clear that the Lebanese government alone cannot solve its intractable problems." The paper said the government would not solve the problem without concerted Arab and international cooperation, and that otherwise the situation will become much worse than it is.

Although the United States' condemnation of Israeli raids on Lebanon were strongly worded this time, "there will be no end to these attacks if there is no joint international action to stop them," said to Okaz.

"The United States can play an effective role with Israel and must undertake the responsibility of deterring further Israeli aggression. But while the American ambassador was talking to President Sarkis about the attacks Israeli forces were again inside

Al-Riyadh's editorial said, "It would be unwise to maintain that Israel will always remain superior to the Arabs because its present strength is not its own but what is supplied to it by the United States. It is true that the U.S. continues to provide Israel with power whenever it fears that the balance may be tipping against it so that it has been said that will Carter controls his advisers, Israel controls both Carter's advisers and the members of Congress.

"Thus, despite the changing patterns of world public opinion regarding the Palestinians and the many United Nations resolutions that urge the recognition of the Palestinian people, the U.S. remains deaf to all appeals even to talk to them unless Israel wants it to do so.

"Since the U.S. is a world power and because its relationships with Israel are inseparable, whatever is written about the United States will fall on deaf ears," it said.

Amongst all this abundant fertility there are, too, evidences of the many mouths competing for sustenance — the bidonvilles (shanty towns) which mar so many landscapes in Morocco. The train passes by a specially big one just before stopping at Meknes station. The tin shacks and mud streets have been whitewashed by the hopeful inhabitants, but as any visitor can see there are not enough jobs, and the young men stand idly at street corners. Not all the sports centers in Morocco, so energetically put up by the government, can cure their moody excess of leisure.

Meknes once had its moment of glory as the capital of Morocco. Geographically its position is better than that of Fez in the north for the government of the surrounding region. Even so, its greatness was brief. It was Moulay Ismail (1672-1727), a member of the Alawid dynasty which kept power from 1659 to 1912, who made of Meknes a Moroccan Versailles. It is said that this violent and extravagant man emulated his contemporary, Louis XIV.

No less than three concentric walls were flung around the town. There were immense barracks for soldiers, prisons for 30,000 slaves, it has now been made into a stables for 12,000 horses, great granaries, oil crushers and gardens, all disposed around the palace itself. What remains now is for the most part greatly ruined massy piers of brick, like ancient Roman palaces, wildly overgrown. Yet there is a certain charm in visiting these huge deserted places, such as the stables, filled in May with wild flowers and humming with bees. The best preserved monuments of Moulay Ismail's time are the superb town gates which are recorded in every guide book. These are surely the finest in the Maghrib. Monumental in scale, they are relieved by exquisite decoration in faience, and in rich bands of worked stone. The Bab Mansur is the most celebrated, standing at the center of the busy medina. tional way as a majlis, a private sitting-room. Soft cushions laid on rugs in every corner, low tables, embroideries, tiled floor and dado, colored glass to cut the summer glare, a general impression of ease and coolness. The garden of Dar Jamai is as inviting as all Moroccan gardens. It was a mass of flowers and shady trees, crisscrossed by tiled paths leading to fountains and little wooden pavilions.

Before leaving Meknes the visitor should see the Madrasa Bou Inania (14th-century) not far from the Dar Jamai. More neglected than some, it yet has much charm. It was only disused in 1959. Climbing to the rooftop dis-brilliant whiteness of the narrow streets of Sale and Rabat, lending them a strange intensity. The shadows seem bright blue. The towns are not conscious of the tourist trade, as Fez and Marrakesh are. Wandering through their less sophisticated alleys is all the more interesting.

The minaret of the Tour Hasan is more or less contemporaneous with the minaret of the Kutubiya mosque in Marrakesh (11th century). Like it, it is four-square, masculine, but lightened by the harmonious carving of interlaced arches and lozenges, in different combinations on each of its four sides. An enormous mosque was planned beside it, and halfexecuted, but only the foundations now remain. Instead, the lav-

On their further side the land drops down to the inlet of the sea into which the river, the Bu Regreg, flows. Above them, to the west, rises the in-and-out maze of the kasbah lanes and steps. To the south stand the walls with their famous gates, of Almohad construction (12th-century). The rich but sober decoration of these is impressive.

Beautiful however as the Oudaya is, perhaps the most memorable spot in Rabat — one of the most memorable in all Morocco - is the Chellah. The Chellah stands outside Rabat proper, being a funerary garden walled and fortified itself like a little citadel. Once through the tall castle-like portal you find yourself gazing down the slopes of a walled garden. It is an ancient and dream-like place, Carefully kept, it is yet not too neat. The flowery terraces are shaded by sombre cypresses, venerable olives and blue-flowering jacarandas. Towards the bottom of the slope stands a cluster of crumbling mausolea, some dating from the 14th-century. One has its own slim minaret, the turquoise tiles missing in many places and the summit occupied by an oldestablished stork's nest. Gnarled trees have grown up in the now roofless buildings and dapple the simple worn tombs with their shadows. Here the students sit or pace, frowning over their books. When they are weary they twang on their small melancholy guitars. No-one could hurry through the Chellah, It must be sauntered in. lingered in — a haunting place.

Only some 20 kilometers distant from Meknes is the one great Roman site of Morocco, Volubilis. It dates from the second-century A.D. For the layman, it has the advantage of being largely standing a great help to the imagination. The big temple known as the Basilica is specially impressive and the mosaics in the "House of Orpheus" are in beautiful condition. Even for the nonarcheologist the site has a beauty of its own, set on the wide plain just below the dramatic hills in which the small picturesque town of Monlay Idriss is perched.

The site has been carefully cleared over the last ten years. Cypress trees watch over the ancient stones and masses of wild flowers, with attendent butterflies and lizards, keep them company. Bronze statuary of high quality was unearthed at Volubilis and is now housed in the museum at and so makes the contract.

But if East is firing on all cylinders, he returns the spade nine, not the ace, at trick two. He thus retains spade control at the same time as he gives you ruff. This allows you to lead a low diamond at trick three to force out the ace — and thus establishes the setting trick. East's return of the nine of spades, rather than the deuce, consistent with the preference convention. By eturning the highest card he can spare in a ruffing return the higher-ranking of the two side suits - which, in this case, are diamonds and put South down one. West must find the killing spade lead at trick one, East must trick two, and West must lead a diamond at trick three. If East-West overcome these right to congratulate them-selves on a scintillating partnership accomplishment

WEATHER

Forecast for the next 24 hours: The northeastern, central and eastern regions are likely to remain extremely hot during the day, but the temperatures will start declining gradually in the afternoon. The coastal areas will be humid and the western and southwestern highlands partially cloudy, offering a chance of sporadic showers. Surface winds will blow mostly northerly at light to moderate speed. Sea conditions will be calm to moderate in the territorial waters.

$65 million on solar program

BRUSSELS, July 25 (R) — The European Common Market-will devote $ 65 million, out of its energy research and development funds in the next four years, to its solar program, community offi-cials said Wednesday.

These figures compare with $25 million in the program, which ended last month.

The EEC will spend$ 38 million in energy saving projects, more than double the amount devoted to them 1975-79.

The sun, the wind and the waves of the Black Sea should generate another 10 per cent of the country's electricity by then, it said.

The document also urged accelerating off-shore exploration for oil and gas and increased exploration for new deposits of coal and tar shales in the Jiu Valley mining belt.

President Nicolae Ceausescu said in a speech earlier this month that Romania would have to cut back on some energy-hungry industrial operations as part of its drive for self-sufficiency by 1990.

Romania, once self-sufficient in oil, announced in March that it had become a net importer of crude and was seeking supplies from the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries and the Soviet Union.

Energy officials signed contracts last December for the first of four nuclear reactors it plans to buy from Canada. Making Romania the only Warsaw Pact state to import nuclear technology from the West.

PEKING, July 25 (R) - China is now encouraging its citizens to build their own houses in an attempt to deal with the country's massive housing shortage, the "People's Daily" said Wednes-

In an about-face from the previous policy which emphasized public housing alone, the paper said people were being encouraged to build homes for themselves with government subsidies.

As an example, it said the city of Fuzhou in eastern China was preparing to set up construction companies to provide materials and assistance to those building homes, and is already receiving building applications from individuals.

"As long as the application is logical and conforms to requirements, it will approved and encouraged," the daily said.

Pertini, himself a socialist, is expected to ask another political leader soon to form Italy's 38th post-war government. Names often mentioned included veteran Christian Democrats Amintore Fanfani, president of the Senate, and foreign minister Arnaldo Forlani.

Craxi on Monday unveiled a program of political action in an effort to break the deadlock, but Christian Democrat leader Benigno Zaccagnini said after a leadership meeting of his party that Craxi's proposals were

The news agency said a hijacker gave himself up and all 37 people on board left the aircraft, a fokker friendship which had been hijacked on a domestic flight between Jessore, in western Bangladesh, and Dacca, the country's capital.

Earlier reports said there were three hijackers.

The hijacker had threatened to blow it up at Calcutta's Dum Dum Airport unless he was paid a one million dollar ransom.

Airport sources said Wednesday the hijacker, who spoke buth English and Bengali, had given the authorities until 0800 P.M. (1430 GMT) to meet his demand. Bangladesh Deputy High Commissioner Atiquzzaman Khan negotiated with the man prior to his release of the hostages. The lone man hijacked it immediately after take-off, forcing it to land shortly after 8.30 A.M. (0300 GMT).
